At the mouth of the Stor, the filling up with sand or mud would also be possible. If the harbour be erected more to the North-east, probably the sand would gradually follow, and so make the water entirely impassable. The building of the docks at Bremerhaven offer, in this respect, a good comparison to an apt selection in the choice of a harbour. In winter when the ice is breaking in the Elbe, ships would rather prefer taking a safe harbour near St. Margarethen, than expose themselves to all the dangers of the ice in winter. If there be a harbour at the BOSch, ships would be able at all times to enter this harbour, they could bring their cargoes to the Altona and Kiel Railway, if the Canal...
